FOREWORD

About 100 farmers' associations engaged in cooperative marketing or purchasing are publishing their own periodicals or have selected established periodicals as their official publications, in order to keep their members informed regarding the work of the associations. These publications vary widely in size, shape, character, and contents. They range from one or two mimeographed sheets issued at irregular intervals, giving figures on shipments and prices, to illustrated weekly or monthly magazines carrying information on all phases of the production and handling of various commodities. Beside the publications issued for members, some of the associations also issue, regularly or irregularly, trade information for the benefit of their members and the commercial agencies handling their products.

The following list has been compiled from periodicals received by the Cooperative Research and Service Division of the Farm Credit Administration and is the twentieth issue of this compilation. It includes publications issued or sponsored by marketing or purchasing associations, those which have been made the official organs of such associations, or are issued by general farm organizations which are sponsoring farmer cooperatives.

In addition to the publications listed, there are others which give considerable space to the cooperative marketing of farm products and the cooperative purchase of farm supplies.
